THE TYRANNY AND NONSENSE OF GLOVES.

Yet, after all, says Harper's Bansar, the whole thing seems to us to be simply despotic and irrational, artificial and unnatural. Read the dictum of a lately published brochure upon etiquette at the national capital: "Gloves nust be worn upon entrance to the drawingcoom, but must always be taken off at the moment one is seated at the table. A recent innovation permits that the gloves shall not be replaced at all after their removal at the table. This, however, may be only one of those fitting fashions worn, like the glove, for the moment, and then cast aside. Yet do not forget that during the serving of a dinner the waiters in attendance alone wear gloves. And even the waiter serves with orester elevance. even the waiter serves with greater elegance with the thumb of the hand wrapped in a damask napkin. Under such contradictory and damask napsin. Under such contradictory and caprictous regulations, is there any excuse to be found in pure reason, we should like to know, for having put on the glove in the first place? And may we not ask why, except to protect our hands from the weather, from frost and sunburn, or in revernee to the prurient modesty of the Turkish vell, we ever wear gloves at all? Fancy Aspasia before her judge with gloves on! Did Helen of Troy, when she 'shadowed her beauty in white vells' to go out on the ramparts with the old king and see her former guests and comrades, walt to draw on. on the ramparts with the old king and see her former guests and comrades, wait to draw on her gloves? No; the ideal of the ancient woman rejects anything of such counterfeit nature; and why should the modern woman hold herself less near an ideal than her predecessor? It is there any logic to be found in the use of the glove other than as a wran? Are we so abject that we may not offer our hare hand? Our acousintance so unworthy that we cannot Our acquaintance so unworthy that we cannot take theirs? Is there leprosy in the touch? take theirs? Is there leprosy in the touch? For our own part, though we hardly imagine that our opinion will turn the currents of society into any fresh channel, yet we cannot but think that the abandonment of gloves at unpretentious evening circles, with the simple and inartificial dressing which that abandonment might bring about, would g, far toward introducing a very different and nore desirable state of things; towards allowing people with cultivation and intelligence, but vithout the means of providing and varyin, he evening dress entailed by gloves, to partificate in society, and toward giving it that any atmosphere of intellectual brilliancy hien ought to be found where polished men as a very meet for purposes of festivity and diventionment."
